This document has been prepared for NCBE by the ERIC Clearinghouse on Urban Education, Institute for Urban and Minority Education, Box 40, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, NY 10027, (800) 601-4868. It was prepared as part of an ongoing collaborative project between NCBE and ERIC/CUE.

Every attempt has been made to maintain the integrity of the printed text. In some cases, changes in format have been made within the constraints of the electronic environment.

The original document was submitted to U.S. Department of Education's Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs under Contract Number T291004001, Task 19.3, by the Center for Applied Linguistics, 1118 22nd Street NW Washington, DC 20037.

Acknowledgements

Many people contributed to the development of these training modules.

First and foremost are the many students, teachers, and administrators across the country who participated in the OBEMLA-funded study of content-ESL practices that led up to their development. The study could not have taken place, nor would these modules would ever have been produced, without their active collaboration.

In addition, Tim D'Emilio (OBEMLA) was instrumental in getting the the project under way, and his colleague Milagros Lanauze provided helpful feedback on an earlier draft.

On the CAL side, Jodi Crandall and Donna Christian were sources of inspiration and support throughout. In addition, Deborah Short, a key research associate on the study and a prominent content-ESL teacher educator, made substantive contributions, as did Ann Galloway.

Finally, two other CAL staff members should be mentioned for their fine professional support: Dotti Kauffman and Margaret Crandall. Their organizational skills and general efficiency are much appreciated.
